

Retracting car sale

By Dominique972, on 18/06/2015 at 18:13

Hello everyone,

Last Friday I sold my vehicle for 2600€ from private to private after 2 meetings with the buyer.

The technical control was done the night before the sale and it was ok.

On Tuesday the new owner of my old car wants to cancel the sale and be refunded because the centralized locking (with the key) no longer works and personally I have never had this problem before. This gentleman tested the locking and unlocking with the key of the vehicle during our 2 previous meetings (no problem) he admitted to have opened and closed the vehicle with the key on Friday, Saturday, Sunday, Monday without any problem.

He wants to cancel the sale, be refunded for his 2600€ + 30€ for the key he bought for the key, thinking that this was the problem + 50€ of gas he put in the vehicle [smile33]

Having repainted the car to sell it more easily and never having to open the trunk with the key and this one does not open the trunk because of the paint that has bled into the hole.

Can he cancel the sale?

The key that does not open the trunk is it a hidden defect?

And if I am forced to take back my vehicle, can I demand the repair of the centralized locking that worked before and after the sale?